PREFACE.

THE taſte, the learning, and the liberality, which the late Right Hon. Denis Daly evinced, in forming the capital collection of Books now offered, entire, to the Public; are ſo well known, and univerſally acknowledged, that it is perfectly unneceſſary to enlarge upon circumſtances, of which the learned world have long been apprized. His premature death, and the certain proſpect of a long minority, induced his family to part with them. Upon the firſt report of this intention, the preſent Proprietors, formed the idea of becoming purchaſers of the whole. They conceived it would have have been, in ſome degree, diſgraceful to the literary character of their Countrymen, if ſuch a Library as this, was carried out of the kingdom; to enrich the public, or private collections of other Nations. To pretend that they had no other object in view, would be abſurd. They hoped, to derive both reputation, and profit, from their purchaſe: to acquire which, they have made no trifling effort. It remains for that Public it has been their wiſh to ſerve, to realize their hopes.

They aſſure them, that not a ſingle Volume, is either engaged, withheld, or changed. That they have reſiſted the moſt tempting offers, for particular articles; it being their fixed determination, that every perſon, ſhould have a fair, and equal opportunity, of becoming poſ-ſeſſed

ſeſſed of Books, ſo much ſuperior, as theſe are, to any, which have been, hitherto, expoſed for ſale in this Country.

Some pains have been taken in drawing up the following Catalogue: and ſome errors have unavoidably eſcaped correction. It is hoped, they will be viewed by the eye of candour, as flowing from their true ſource; the neceſſity of ſpeedy publication.

name, ſituated on the river Loire near Orleans, who ſeems to have floriſhed about the year 1310. This poem is eſteemed by the French the moſt valuable piece of their old poetry.—The difficulties and dangers of a lover, in purſuing and obtaining the object of his deſires, are the literal arguments of this poem. This deſign is couched under the allegory of a Roſe, which our lover after frequent obſtacles gathers in a delicious garden. He traverſes vaſt ditches, ſcales lofty walls, and forces the gates of adamantine and almoſt impregnable caſtles. Theſe enchanted fortreſſes are all inhabited by various divinities; ſome of which aſſiſt, and ſome oppoſe the lover's progreſs." Warton's Hiſt. of Eng. Poetry vol. 1. p. 368. Theſe adventures are the ſubjects of the Paintings that adorn this MS.

1195 Another, a very fair MS. folio, on Vellum, with 17 Minatures, bound in calf, gilt leaves.

1196 A moſt beautiful and magnificent MS. on Vellum, folio, bound in Morocco, containing the Lives of St. Edmund, and St. Fremund, in Engliſh verſe; by John Lydgate, Monk of Bury.

It is ornamented with 50 ſuperb, and curious miniatures. The firſt of which, was in all probability, deſigned to repreſent Henry 6th ſeated on his throne, and Lydgate kneeling, at his feet. Strutt in his Regal and Eccleſiaſtical Antiquities, Plate 41, has engraved from another copy of this Poem, (preſerved in the Britiſh Muſeum, MSS. Harl. 2278.) William Curteis abbot of St. Edmunds Bury preſenting the Book to Henry the 6th. As it has never been printed, the following extracts are given; not only as a ſpecimen of the Work; but as they tend to aſcertain the date of the MS. the occaſion of its being written, and explain the two firſt Paintings. It begins.

The noble ſtoory to putte in remembrance,
Off Seynt Edmund, mayde, martir, and kyng;
With his ſuppoort, my ſtyle I wyl avance;
Firſt to compyle affter my konnyng,
His gloryous lyff, his birthe, and his gynnyng,
And by diſcent, how he that was ſoo good,
Was in Saxonye, born of the Royal blood.

— — — —

And firſt this martir ſhall for me provide,
And of his mercy opyn me the gate,
To make grace for to been my guyde,
Thro hooly lyff in Englyſh to tranſlate,
And to remembre, the ſtately Royal date 1422
Whan I firſt gan on this tranſlation,
It was the year be computacion.

Whan

Whan Sixte Henry in his Eſtat Royal
With his ſceptre of yngelond and of ffrance
Heeld at Bury his feeſte pryncipal
Off cryſtemeſſe with a ful greet habundance
And aftir that lyſt to have pleſance
As his counſeyl gan for him prouide
There in his place tyl Eſtern for tabyde

—— —— ——

Which at departyng in Bury froom his place
Lyſt of his hih nobleſſe and magnanymyte
And of his owne ſpecial ſynguleer grace
Movyd in hym ſylff of his benygnite
Off ther Chapuls a brothir for to be
Yevyng his Chapleyens occaſion and mateer
Ay to remembre on hym in ther prayeer

—— —— ——

In this mateer ther is no moore to ſeyn,
Saff to the kyng to do pleſaunce,
The Abbot William, his humble chapleyn,
Gaff me in charge, to doon my attendance:
The noble ſtoory to tranſlate, in ſubſtance
Out of the Latyn, after my konnyng;
He in ful purpooſe to geve it to the kyng.

—— —— ——

But yet afforn, or I gan to wryte,
Upon my knees right thus I gan to ſeye,
To the hooly martir, and meekly for to preye,

After this follows a painting of Lidgate kneeling at the Shrine of St. Edmund. The remaining 48 paintings repreſent the incidents related in the Poetry.

At the beginning of the Legend of St. Fremund are the following lines.

Off Burchardus folwe I ſhall the ſtyle
Yᵗ of Seynt Ffremund was whiloam Secretarye
Which of entent did his lyff compyle
Was his Regiſtreer & alſo his notarye
And in deſert was with him ſolytarye
And with him ay preſent remembryng ery thing
Wroot lyff and myrac les of this hooly kyng.

It appears from the following lines, that the Legend of St. Fremund was preſented to Edward 4th, a circumſtance that ſeems to have eſcaped Warton. Hiſt. of Eng. Poetry, vol. 2. p. 54.

Encreaſe our kyng in kyghtly hyh proweſſe,
With all his lordys of the Spiritualtie;
Pray god grante conqueſts, and worthyneſſe.
Be rightful rule, to al the temporalte,
And to Edward the fourte, joye and felicyte:
Off his two reemys, faith, love and obeyſſance
Longe to perſevere in his victoryonſſe;
As juſt enherytor of yngelond, and ffrance,

Go lytel book, be feerful, quak for drade,
For tapere in ſo high preſence.

Sovreyn lord, pleſe it to your goodlyhede,
And to your gracyous Royal magnificence,
To take this treteeys, which atween hope and drede
Preſented is to your high excellence.
